 个人评价

I am an undergraduate student majoring in Artificial Intelligence, with a strong interest in AI products and front-end interaction design. I have hands-on experience in campus product development, covering the full process from requirement analysis and UI design to front-end implementation.

I possess strong product thinking, user experience design ability, and front-end development skills, and I am able to transform ambiguous user needs into feasible product solutions and interface prototypes. I have participated in the development of the UniKorn TechG Hub campus community platform, where I was responsible for UI design, publicity and operations, and community activity organization, contributing to the platform's growth to over 500 registered users.

I also have strong organizational, coordination, and cross-team communication abilities, and I am capable of helping student teams turn ideas into real, deployable products. I hope to further develop practical experience in AI product development, product planning, and product strategy.
